METHODOLOGY

I plan to promote a methodology based on the analysis of plays that develop throughout the match as a cross-cutting theme. This generates the basic objectives to work on in the development of analytical, mixed, or contextualized tasks throughout the season. Analytical technical development will be the focus of activations as the beginning of the tasks.

Diagnostic assessment will be of utmost importance in developing the work plan, thus meeting the specific needs predominant in the goalkeeper's development.

Video analysis will be used as a fundamental support for observing strengths and weaknesses that may arise in training or official matches. Observational and analytical skills, including examples, play a fundamental role in understanding the game itself.

Cognitive work will be part of the methodological process, aiming to achieve constant improvement in the three fundamental aspects: Perception, Decision-Making, and Execution.

I believe there must be a connection between technical and tactical objectives, as technique will be used as a training tool to enhance tactical movements.

The fundamental objective of the training plans will be based on the pursuit of specialization and effectiveness in the execution of the goalkeeper's actions, as well as everything related to the technical and tactical movements they can develop throughout the game.

The methodological project is developed in constant coordination with the Head Coach and the physical department for proper functioning, as is the methodological development for the formative stages of those teams or national teams that consider it appropriate.

Enzo Ferrari joins the Bielsa team

May 30, 2024

URUGUAY – Amid a series of changes in the Uruguayan national team's coaching staff, the Uruguayan Football Association (AUF) has appointed Enzo Ferrari as the new goalkeeping coach, following the controversial departure of Carlos Nicola. This decision comes at a time of restructuring under the direction of Argentine coach Marcelo Bielsa.
